

Subject: Community resources from Cornwall Wildlife Trust

I hope you are well. I am the HR,S&W Manager at Cornwall Wildlife Trust.

At the beginning of the Coronavirus lockdown we realised we needed to be there for wildlife, wildlife lovers and those isolating at home. Without the ability to venture too far, we acted fast to provide things to see, do, read, watch and make from home that would maintain a connection with nature.

10 weeks in we have countless supporters building hedgehog homes, sending in pictures of wildlife they have seen in their gardens, engaging with online talks and generally appreciating Cornwall's wildlife in new and deeper ways.

We have a good mix of activities for families, activities for adults (although the adults very much seem to enjoy the children's activities too!), in depth video discussions, blog posts, spotter guides and worksheets.

If you feel any or all of this would be valuable for your community please feel free to pass on this link in any of your communications: www.cornwallwildlifetrust.org.uk/coronavirus

If any of your readers wish to let us know what they have been up to, we would love to hear from them by email or on any of our social media channels.

We also wanted you to know that as of today (you're the first we've told!) we have put our Spring edition of Wild Cornwall (normally a members exclusive magazine), online for all to enjoy. Packed with all the wildlife happenings around Cornwall, we think your readers would love it, so please feel free to share this link in any of your communications.

We are biased but it is well worth a read in the garden!

Finally, we have an email newsletter which goes out monthly, packed full of news, sightings, activities, events and tips. If you haven't subscribed already it would be great if we could add your email address so we can keep in touch. Simply email back or sign up here: <https://www.cornwallwildlifetrust.org.uk/emailnewsletter>

Thank you for your time and please feel free to email back if you have any questions about the work we do.

Best wishes,

Shelley Mair
